Probing with Questions

• “Why did you do that?”
• “How long have you felt this way?”
• “Well, what did you say to him?”
• Jumping in and interrupting by asking about “details” of what the person is talking about.

>> Comes across as you’re interested, but takes emphasis off what THEY are saying and onto what YOU are thinking.
Common Communication Killers

Offering Advice, Solutions and Answers

• “Just put it out of your mind.”
• “If I were you, I’d...”
• “This will solve it...”
• “Get over it!”
Common Communication Killers

Offering Advice, Solutions and Answers

• “Just put it out of your mind.”
• “If I were you, I’d...”
• “This will solve it...”
• “Get over it!”

>> While well-intended, when a person shares a problem, your unsolicited advice robs them of problem-solving themselves and triggers resistance.
Common Communication Killers

Giving Woulda-Coulda-Shouldas

- “You shouldn’t think like that.”
- “What you ought to do is…”
- “What you should have done…”
- “How I would have handled that is…”
Common Communication Killers

Giving Woulda-Coulda-Shouldadas

• “You shouldn’t think like that.”
• “What you ought to do is…”
• “What you should have done…”
• “How I would have handled that is…”

>> Monday morning quarterbacking is easier for everyone. But it comes across as preachy and can quickly keep people from sharing anything ever.
Common Communication Killers

Hijacking with Me-Too’s

• “Right, the same thing happened to me.”
• “I’d feel the same way.”
• “Oh yeah, I know exactly what you’re talking about.”
Common Communication Killers

Hijacking with Me-Too’s

• “Right, the same thing happened to me.”
• “I’d feel the same way.”
• “Oh yeah, I know exactly what you’re talking about.”

>> Anytime someone shares THEIR problem or story, and you respond with sharing YOUR OWN story, you have hijacked their conversation and taken their story hostage. They feel like one too.
